. Mr. Witt made a graceful and appropriate little speech, in which he spoke of the power of the speaker, gave the medalist some sound counsel, and invoked for him a laborious life so well spent that at its close men might say of him: "It is well for the world that he has lived."

Mr. Witt was loudly applauded, and his fine taste, sound counsel, and graceful and fitting words were highly appreciated by all who heard him.

STEEL MEDAL.

which he said:

what the Steel Medal is. It was a happy tlon. thought wisely and gracefully put into act by a generous nature. It gives to Richmond College a peculiar distinction-that of awarding the only prize for an important ment in this most graceful, impressive, and useful art. How often the fine thought, the stately rhythm, all the vis vivida, the life that glows and beats in a great classic is maimed or weakened because the appointed expounder has never it. Gross injustice is done the Word of the General and his family. God-that Word which in every sense is meant to be spirit and life-and gross injustice done to the multitude of its susceptible hearers by the spiritless, lifeless, senseless, colorless style in which its fresh narrative, its noble biography, its sublime poetry, are droned out from the sacred desk. It is a most useful art; for it is eminently a social one. Our eyes glisten under the mellow light of the lovely interior painted by the poet of the domestic affections, especially of the scene in which "the day is done." And one reads from the treasured and one lends to the rhyme of the poet The music of his voice. What a boon to the worn spirit to find its favorite author interpreted in the melodious notes of a sympathetic voice, and rise on its vibrand tones into "thoughts that wander through eternity." The speaker gave a charming picture of the Macaulay family reading under the evening lamp, and of the delightful and profitable retinions provided by neighborhood reading clubs. It is sometimes said that the art of reading is rather a feminine accomplishment. With a pleasant allusion to the fascination of a woman's voice to the magnetic charm of Fanny Kemble's readings, he urged that neither gallantry nor justice required us to give place here to the ladies, and congratulated Mr. McCormick on the superior skill and grace which had merited this distinction in his art; for, said he, it is an art, not a natural gift. After analyzing the elements that go to make it up, he conferred the medal as an incentive to the pursuit of all the arts and grace to go to constitute the complete man.

The occasion was a brilliant one, and a fitting close of a most successful session. BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

At a meeting of the Board of Trustees of lichmond College held yesterday afternoon number of matters of importance were acted upon. The Committee on Grounds and Buildings called attention to the improvement of the streets leading to and around the col-cial fund for the improvement of the grounds and buildings. The recommendation was cordially adopted, and measures inaugurated for carrying The degree of D. D. was conferred on

Rev. T. P. Crawford, of Tung Chow, China. A committee was appointed to spread on the minutes a suitable tribute to the memory of A. M. Bailey, Esq., a member of the Board who had died during the year.
